DANIEL MILLER MURDERED DIES OF WOUND GIVEN BY DISCHARGED COLORED WAITER.

He was Sitting in Corridor of Hotel Discussing a Menu with Brother when Fatal Shot was Fired.

Daniel Miller died about one o'clock in the afternoon on Fourth of July from blood poisoning resulting from the wounds. The funeral will take place on Friday, interment to be made at Dillsburg. About a month ago his aged mother passed away in her 91st year. He is survived by two brothers and two sisters, Harry Miller of Harrisburg; C. Miller of York; Mrs. George Strayer of Bermudian county and an unmarried sister, at Dillsburg.

Daniel Miller, proprietor of the Hotel Dauphin, Harrisburg, was shot down by a colored servant, Leon Gilbert, on Tuesday of last week, while in the hotel corridor talking to his brother Harry, and W. P. Hastings of Philadelphia. He is in the Harrisburg Hospital and the last reports state that he is improving and that each day makes his ultimate recovery more probable.

Daniel Miller was a native of Dillsburg and with his brother Harry, had been proprietors of Hotel Gettysburg in this place for a number of years. Daniel Miller has recently been living with his brother Harry in Carlisle. Harry recently sold the Mansion House business in Carlisle to J. N. McCormick and Daniel bought the Hotel Dauphin in Harrisburg. It is only some weeks ago that Daniel Miller assumed charge of the Harrisburg hotel.

The shooting of Mr. Miller was the most daring that has been seen in Harrisburg for some years. The shooting occurred about 7.40 o'clock following a meeting between the hotel man and the waiter in which the latter was discharged for lack of attention to guests. As a matter of fact, Gilbert's sullen conduct throughout the afternoon attracted the attention of Harry Miller, a brother of the proprietor. The head waiter was called in and instructed to warn Gilbert. The latter disregarded the head waiter's words and told him to "go to h—l."

About 6.30 o'clock Gilbert was assigned to the second floor dining room. A guest entered the dining room and took a seat at a table. Gilbert had taken other diners' orders and went to the kitchen, where he remained. A half-hour elapsed and then the guest got up from the table and started to walk from the dining room. Mr. Miller, who was standing near the desk, inquired why the guest was leaving.

"Well, I have been sitting there at that table for at least half an hour and I haven't been waited upon," replied the guest.

After this conversation Miller went to the dining room, where he accosted Gilbert, who was idly leaning against the wall. Miller inquired about his service in the dining room.

"I was tryin' to get that man's order as fast as I could. I can't do no more," replied Gilbert sullenly.

"You go down to the office and get your money. We don't need you around here any longer," said Mr. Miller.

Gilbert walked to the office and later, receiving his money from Miss Catherine Fitzpatrick, the cashier, he remarked, "I'll be back again."

The waiter donned his hat and coat and walked to the Lochiel Hotel. He went to the bar and accosted Charles Boyle, a clerk.

"I want a revolver, Charlie," said Gilbert.

"What do you want with it," asked Boyle.

"Oh, I want to shoot a rat," was the reply.

Boyle refused to let him have a gun, so Gilbert left the hotel. He walked to the City Loan Company office on Market street and told the clerk he wanted to purchase a gun. His order was refused, so he went to Cohen's pawnshop a few doors below and purchased a 38-calibre revolver and securing some cartridges, placed them in the barrel and then proceeded up Market street to the Dauphin hotel.

The object of his quest, Mr. Miller, was seated on a small Davenport in the front lobby. He was facing Market street. Beside him on the right was W. P. Hastings, a representative of the Hershey Chocolate Company, who was a guest at the hotel. To his left sat Harry Miller, his brother. Harry Miller, although to the left of his brother, sat on the end of the balustrade. He was showing his brother the menu he had prepared for luncheon. The three men were engaged in conversation when Gilbert entered the hotel. They paid no attention to him upon his entrance until he started to interrupt their conversation. "I want an understanding," gruffly said the negro.

"Well, I haven't time to talk to you now, come back in the morning," answered Proprietor Miller.

"If I can't get satisfaction from you now, I'll see that I get it," said the negro, sullenly. Then with his right hand in his coat pocket he opened fire at his former employer. As he shot he retreated toward the door.

Every bullet struck Miller. The first passed through the right hand of the hotel man and the next two grazed the left side of his chest and left shoulder, leaving flesh wounds. The fourth bullet struck Miller in the chest and brought him down to the floor. Two of the bullets struck the newel post of the balustrade.

Patrolman Buch, stationed at Third and Market streets, heard the shots and running across the street came up to Gilbert just as he reached the car tracks in the middle of Market street.

Bids for Federal Building Opened.

The foregoing is a picture of the Federal building to be erected on corner of Baltimore and High streets, Gettysburg. The finished design was completed several weeks ago by the department and it is said the design will not be changed and the building when finished will be exactly as portrayed in the picture.

Nine bids ranging in price from $97,000 to $117,000 for the construction of the Federal building at Gettysburg were opened by Supervising Architect J. Knox Taylor at the treasury department, Washington, Tuesday of last week and made public on Wednesday. The contract will not be let until the estimates have been gone over to ascertain the lowest responsible bidder.

The specifications upon which the bids were presented called for the exterior of the structure to be finished in either limestone or sandstone. Congressman D. F. Lafean who was present when the estimates were read, stated that he will make every effort to have white marble substituted for the other stone. It is his desire to have the front, rear and sides of the structure the same as that of the York building. It was through the efforts of Mr. Lafean that Congress appropriated $175,000 for the improvements of which $27,000 was expended for the site.

The work on the building is expected to be started in the near future, in order that the structure may be completed and occupied by the time of the fiftieth anniversary of the battle of Gettysburg.

The bids and the kind of stone bid upon were as follows: John G. Upkefer & Co., Minerva, O., limestone, $98,650; Winscher Engineering Company, $102,800; sandstone $106,800; Merriks Fire-Proofing Co., New York, $115,990 and $108,000; Newport Construction Company, Newport News, Va., $107,000 and $114,000; W. H. Fissell & Co., New York, $105,000 and $115,099; James G. Doak & Co., Philadelphia, limestone, $99,182; Charles McCaull Company, Philadelphia, $102,659 and $108,659; A. B. Stannard, New York, $97,000 and $99,500; Connors Bros. Co., Lowell, Mass., limestone, $110,100.

As he placed the negro under arrest, he found Gilbert's coat afire.

"Hand over that gun," demanded the patrolman.

"Here you dare have the gun," said the waiter, handing over the weapon and smothering the incipient flames.

"Who did you shoot in there?" asked the officer.

"I shot my boss, Dan Miller. He kicked me down stairs because he says I did not wait on a man."

The true story about the stairway was related at the hotel. Gilbert slipped on the stairs and fell.

Miller was hastened to the hospital and, after his wounds had been attended to an effort was made to probe for the bullet in his chest. This attempt was almost immediately abandoned, owing to the weakened condition of Miller. Loss of blood is the reason attributed for his syncope, and it is feared there are internal hemorrhages.

Several days after the shooting when Gilbert was told that Mr. Miller was resting easier and would probably recover, Gilbert said:

"I hope he gets out. I was drinking and did not realize what I was doing until now."

STORY OF NEWSPAPER MAN

WHO VISITED BATTLEFIELD OF GETTYSBURG AFTER THE FIGHT

The Field With Its Terrible Sight of the Awful Battle is Described.

Thomas W. Knox, representing a New York City newspaper rushes to Gettysburg as soon as the news of the battle reached the city and succeeds in getting to Gettysburg on July 5, 1863. On July 6th he sends his paper the following interesting story of what the field looked like at that time, an appropriate memory on this 48th anniversary of the great battle.

Gettysburg, Pa., July 6, 1863. At the time of writing you yesterday I had not visited the entire battle field which is hereafter to be one of the proud spots of our national history. To-day I have passed from end to end of the whole ground where the lines of battle were drawn. The place bears evidence of having been the scene of a fierce struggle. The shocks of those two masses of humanity, surging and rearing the one against the other, could hardly pass without leaving their traces in fearful characters. At Waterloo, at Wagram, and at Jena the wheat grows more luxuriantly and the corn shoots its stalks further towards the sky than before the great conflicts that rendered those fields famous. The fields of Gettysburg and Antietam hereafter shall more bountifully reward the farmer as he tills the soil, which has been made richer by the outpoured blood of thousands of America's sons.

From the Town to the Battle Field.

Passing out of Gettysburg by the Baltimore turnpike, we come in a few steps to the entrance of the cemetery. Little of the enclosure remains save the wicket gateway, from which the gates have been torn. The neat wooden fence first thrown down to facilitate the movement of our artillery became absorbed for fuel and in various other uses, as the soldiers made their camp on the spot. A few palings scattered carelessly around are all that remain. The cemetery was such as is usually to be found near thrifty towns of the size of Gettysburg. None of the monuments and adornings were highly expensive, though all were neat, and many of them bordered on the costly. The place was kept with considerable care, as is evidenced by the few traces of horticulture that remain. The ees is arrested by a notice prominently posted forbidding the destruction or mutilation of any shrub, tree or stone about the place, under severe penalties. The defiance that war makes against the civil law, and the overthrow of many of society's customs, is forcibly apparent as one peruses those warning lines.

Traces of the Struggle at Cemetery.

Monuments and headstones lie here and there overturned. Graves, once carefully tended by some loving hand, have been trampled by horses' feet until the vestiges of verdure have disappeared. The neat and well trained shrubbery has vanished, or is but a broken and withered mass of tangled brushwood. On one grave lies a dead artillery horse, fast decomposing under the July sun. On another lie the torn garments of some wounded soldier, stained and saturated with his blood. Across a small headstone, bearing the words "To the memory of our beloved child, Mary," lie the fragments of a musket shattered by a cannon shot. In the centre of a space enclosed by an iron fence and containing a half dozen graves a few rails are still standing where they were erected by our soldiers and served to support the shelter tents of a bivouacking squad. A family shaft has been broken in fragments by a shell, and only the base remains, with a portion of the inscription thereon. Stone after stone felt the effects of the fiercest cannon that was poured upon the crest of the hill. Cannon thundered and foot and horse soldiers tramped over the sleeping place of the dead. Other dead were added to those who are resting here, and many a wounded soldier still lives to remember the contest above those silent graves.

Position of Cemetery Hill—Its Importance.

The hill on which this cemetery is located was the centre of our line of battle and the key to the whole position. Had the rebels been able to carry this point they would have forced us into retreat, and the whole battle would have been lost. To pierce our line here was Lee's great endeavor, and he threw his best brigades against it. Wave after wave of living valor rolled up that slope, only to roll back again under the deadly fire of our artillery and infantry. It was on this hill, a little to the right of the cemetery, where occurred the charge of the famous brigade of Louisiana Tigers. It was their boast that they were never yet foiled in an attempt to take a battery, but on this occasion they suffered a defeat and nearly annihilation. Sad and dispirited they mourn their repulse and terrible losses in the charge.

The Battle Ground Before Us.

From the summit of this hill a large portion of the battle ground is spread out before the spectator. In front and at his feet lies the town of Gettysburg, containing in quiet times a population of four or five thousand souls. It is not more than a hundred yards to the houses in the edge of the village where the contest with the rebel sharpshooters took place. To the left of the town stretches a long valley, bounded on each side by a gently sloping ridge.

The crest of each ridge is distant a good three fourths of a mile or more from the other. It was on these ridges that the lines of battle on the second and third days were formed, the rebel line being on the ridge to the westward. The one stretching directly from our left hand, and occupied by our own men, has but little timber upon it, while that held by the rebels can boast of several groves of greater or less extent. In one of these the Pennsylvania College is embowered, while in another is seen the Theological Seminary. Half way between the ridges are the ruins of a large brick building burned during the engagement, and dotted about here and there are various brick and frame structures. Two miles at our left hand rises a sharp pointed elevation, known to the inhabitants of the region as Round Hill. Its sides are wooded and the forest stretches from its base across the valley to the crest of the western ridge.

The Valley Between the Ridges.

It must not be supposed that the space between the ridges is an even plain, shaven with the scythe and levelled by the roller. It rises and falls gently and with little regularity, but in no place is it steep of ascent. Were it not for its ununiformity and for the occasional sprinkling of trees over its surface, it could be compared to a patch of rolling prairie in miniature. To the south west of the further ridge is seen the mountain region of Western Maryland, behind which the rebels had their line of retreat. It is not a wild, rough mass of mountains, but a region of hills of the larger and more inaccessible sort. They are traversed by roads only in a few localities, and their passage, except through the gaps, is difficult for a single team and impossible for an army.

The Theological Seminary

spoken of above, was one of the spots around which the battle raged. Beyond it was where the First and Eleventh corps contended with Ewell and Longstreet on the first day of the engagement. Afterwards, finding that the rebels were too strong for them, they fell back and took up a new position, including this building on the line. Here the loss was very heavy, and the seminary shows the fearful nature of the struggle. Its walls are perforated with shot and shell, and the bricks are indented by numerous bullet marks. Its windows show the effects of the musketry, and but little glass remains to shut out the cold and rain. The building is not now in use according to its original design, but is occupied as a hospital by the rebels. From a school for education of ministers of the Gospel to a receptacle of rebel wounded is a change indeed. The Pennsylvania College has been similarly occupied, and the instruction of the students is neglected for the present.

Position of a Battery.

In passing from the cemetery along the crest of the ridge where our line of battle stood, I first came upon the position occupied by some of the batteries. This is shown by the numerous dead horses lying unburied and by the large mounds which mark where others have been slightly covered up. There are additional traces of an artillery fight. Here is a broken wheel of a gun carriage, an exploded caisson, a handspike and the numerous peculiarly colored paper covers that accompany fixed ammunition. In the fork of a tree I found a Testament, with the name "Charles Durrall, Corporal of Company, G," written on the fly leaf. The guns and the gunners have disappeared. Some of the latter are now with the column moving in pursuit of the enemy, others are suffering in the hospitals, and still others are resting where the bugle's reveille shall never awaken them.

Defences by the Road Side.

Between the cemetery and the town and at the foot of the ridge where I stand runs the road leading to Emmitsburg. It is not a turnpike, but a common dirt road, and as it leaves the main street leading into town it makes a diagonal ascent of the hill. On the eastern side of this road is for a short distance bordered by a stone wall. Elsewhere on both sides there is nothing but a rail fence. A portion of our sharpshooters took position behind this wall and erected traverses to protect them from a flanking fire should the enemy attempt to move up the road from Gettysburg. These traverses are constructed at right angles to the wall, by making a "crib" of fence rails, two feet high and the same distance apart, and then filling it up with dirt. Farther along on the road I find the rails from the western side of the road piled against the fence on the east, so as to form a breastwork two or three feet in height—a few spadeful of dirt serve to fill up the interstices. This defence was thrown up by the rebels at the time they were holding the line of the roads.

Evidence of Hot Work.

Moving to the left I find still more severe traces of artillery fighting. Twenty-seven dead horses on a space of little more than one acre is evidence of heavy work. Here are a few scattered trees, which were evidently used as a screen for our batteries. These trees did not escape the storm of shot and shell that was rained in that direction. Some of them were perforated by cannon shot, or have been completely cut off in that peculiar splintering manner that marks the course of a projectile through green wood. Close by where this fighting took place are piled a large number of muskets and cartridge boxes that have been collected from the field. Considerable work has been done in thus gathering the debris of the battle, but it is by no means complete. Over all the ground are scattered muskets, bayonets and sabres, our own being indiscriminately mingled with those of the rebels.

Burial Places of the Fallen.

My next advance to the left carries me where the ground is thickly studded with graves. In one group I count a dozen graves of the Twentieth Massachusetts, near by those of the One Hundred and Thirty-seventh New York, and close at hand an equal number from the Twelfth New Jersey. Care has been taken to place a head-board at each grave, with a legible inscription thereon, showing whose remains are resting beneath. The head-board is usually made from the remnant of a box that may have served its purpose and become useful as a box no longer. In a few instances they appear to have been made from fresh lumber, with special reference to their present use. On one board the comrades of the dead soldiers had nailed the back of his knapsack, on which his name was painted. On another was a brass plate, bearing the soldier's name in heavily stamped letters.

Artificial Defences.

The line of breastworks continue. From the center of our position, far away to the extreme left, our men threw up hasty defences, from which to resist the rebel attack. Wherever stone fences were found they were taken advantage of to form a part of the line. Where these were not at hand the rails from fences were heaped up and covered slightly with dirt. Where these did not run in the proper direction works of earth and trees were thrown up, behind which the men were to fight. They extended nearly to the base of Round Hill and into the timber that skirts that elevation. They were thrown up on Wednesday night, after the First and Eleventh Corps had been driven back through the town. It was General Meade's plan to compel the enemy to make an attack, and for this purpose the works were thrown up. At the same time the rebels were not idle. They threw up a line of over four miles in length, in some cases constructing it with great care. For much of the way their works partake more of the nature of permanent defences than they do of a fortification that is designed to be merely temporary. It was evidently their supposition on Wednesday night that they could compel us to make the attack. They looked for an assault with inferior numbers upon their army in strong position of their own choosing. Their expectations in this particular were not fulfilled.

Effect of the Whitworth Projectile.

Moving still to the left, I found an orchard in which the fighting appears to have been desperate in the extreme. Artillery shot had plowed through the ground in every direction, and the trees did not by any means escape the fury of the storm. The long balls of iron, said by officers present to be a modification of the Witworth projectile, lay everywhere scattered. The rebels must have been well supplied with this species of ammunition, and they evidently used it with no sparing hand. At one time I counted twelve of these bolts lying on a space not fifty feet square. I was told that the forest in rear of our position was full of these shot that passed over our heads in the time of the action. The rebel artillery fire has heretofore been excellent, but I am told that on the present occasion it was not accurate. Why it was so is difficult to explain.

Battle Debris.

The defences thrown up on our left were next in order of visit. They consisted of a single line of temporary earthworks, and in a few instances of two lines. Behind them lay the debris of battle scattered everywhere. Pieces of clothing, tattered shelter tents, spoiled cartridges, canteens pierced by bullets, torn haversacks, broken muskets, sabres, bayonets, soldiers' equipments—all were mingled in confusion. Stained and saturated with loyal blood, the fragments of clothing torn from wounded heroes bore evidence of the terrible struggle. Behind the breastwork were the graves of the fallen, dotted thickly around. The ground was deeply cut by the wheels of the artillery as it performed its evolutions on the field.

Effects Upon Wheatfield.

A mile from our central position, on the crest of the hill at the cemetery, was a field of wheat, and near to it a large tract, on which corn was growing luxuriantly before the battle. The wheat was fearfully trampled by the hurrying feet of the dense masses of infantry as they changed their positions during the battle. In the corn

GO TO THE RESCUE.

Don't Wait till it's Too Late—Follow the Example of a Gettysburg Citizen.

Rescue the aching back. If it keeps on aching, trouble comes. Backache is kidney ache. If you neglect the kidneys' warning.

Look out for urinary trouble—diabetes.

This Gettysburg citizen will show you how to go to the rescue.

Harry J. Lawney, 9 Steinwehr Ave., Gettysburg, Pa., says: "We publicly endorsed Doan's Kidney Pills two years ago and at this time willingly speak in their praise again. My back ached almost constantly and at times I could hardly get around. The kidney secretions gave me much annoyance by their irregularity in passage and I was lame and stiff. Seeing Doan's Kidney Pills advertised, I procured a box at the People's Drug Store and they positively and permanently cured me. I have been in good health ever since. I know of a number of other people who have taken Doan's Kidney Pills and in each case benefit has been received."

Without Fear of Successful Contradiction, We Claim that the

is Better than all Others for these very Pertinent Reasons:

Most Comfortable bed ever slept on—soft, yielding, but springy and resilient—never packs or gets lumpy, or loses its feeling of newness. That is because it is made of Ostermoor sheet; built, not stuffed. We have scores of letters from doctors and competent judges who declare it the only

Absolutely sanitary mattress because dust cannot work into it; no vermin can harbor in it; a sun-bath is all the renovating it ever needs; it will not absorb dampness, disease germs, or any poison from perspiration or the atmosphere. It is always

Perfectly Dry because non-absorbent. If the ticking is dry, the mattress is dry. No taking cold from it, no unpleasant or musty odor about it; always fresh and sweet. Testimonials in our free book bear witness for those who have used it for thirty years or more and who do not hesitate to say that it Lasts a Life-time and stays in perfect condition. It never needs remaking or renovating. You may remove and clean the tick as often as you like.

No other mattress in the world, of any material, at any price, from any maker or through any dealer, can truthfully make and prove all the claims as can the Ostermoor. Do not take our word for it—our word is good—but if you will the proof is there from U. S. Government tests and reports, letters from prominent men and women and the testimony of schools, hotels, hospitals and steamships where extraordinary service is required.

The book is handsome as well as convincing; contains over 200 illustrations—about beds of all ages about sleep, its lack (insomnia); about mattress-hair—some things will be surprising and you will wish you had known them long ago. Of course, it also explains the merits and styles of Ostermoor Mattresses, Church cushions, etc. This book costs you a post card; don't you wish a copy? The Tenderfoot Farmer

It was one of these experimental farmers, who put green spectacles on his cow and fed her shavings. His theory was that it didn't matter what the cow ate so long as she was fed. The questions of digestion and nourishment had not entered into his calculations.

It's only a "tenderfoot" farmer that would try such an experiment with a cow. But many a farmer feeds himself regardless of digestion and nutrition. He might almost as well eat shavings for all the good he gets out of his food. The result is that the stomach grows "weak" the action of the organs of digestion and nutrition are impaired and the man suffers the miseries of dyspepsia and the agonies of nervousness.

To strengthen the stomach, restore the activity of the organs of digestion and nutrition and brace up the nerves, use Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. It is an unfailing remedy, and has the confidence of physicians as well as the praise of thousands healed by its use.

In the strictest sense "Golden Medical Discovery" is a temperance medicine. It contains neither intoxicants nor narcotics, and is as free from alcohol as from opium, cocaine and other dangerous drugs. All ingredients printed on its outside wrapper.

Don't let a dealer delude you for his own profit. There is no medicine for stomach, liver and blood "just as good" as "Golden Medical Discovery."

STORY OF NEWSPAPER MAN.

Artillery had been stationed, and changed its position as often as the enemy obtained its range. Hardly a hill of corn is left in its pristine luxuriance. The little that escaped the boot or the wheel, as the guns moved from place to place, has since been nibbled off by hungry horses during the night bivouac subsequent to the battle. Not a stalk of wheat is upright; not a blade of corn remains uninjured, all has fallen long before the time of harvest. Another harvest, in which death was the reaper has been gathered above it.

On an extreme left the pointed summit of a hill of a thousand feet elevation rises towards the sky. Beyond it the country falls off into the mountain region that extends to the Potomac and across it into Virginia. This hill is steep and difficult of ascent, and formed a strong position on which the left of our line could rest. The enemy assaulted this point with great fury, throwing his divisions one after the other against it. Their efforts were of no avail. Our men defended their ground against every attack. It was like the dash of the French at Waterloo against the immovable columns of the English. Stubborn resistance overcame the valor of the assailants. Time after time they came to the assault, only to fall back as they had advanced. Their final retreat left the remnant of our own men still standing behind their works. The rebel dead and wounded were scattered thickly about the ground. Our own were not wanting.

Stormed with Shot and Shell.

Nearly to the left extreme of the line, and half way between the crests of the ridges, stands a neat farm house. Around this dwelling the battle raged as around Hougomont at Waterloo. At one time it was in the rebel possession, and was fiercely attacked by our men. The walls were pierced with shot and shell, many of the latter exploding within, and making of themselves a scene of devastation. The glass was shattered by rifle bullets on every side, and all the woodwork bears testimony to the struggle. The sharpshooters were in every room, and added to the disorder caused by the explosion of shells. What the missiles spared one soldier destroyed. The rebels were driven from the house, and the position was taken by our own men. They in turn were dislodged, but finally took and held the place.

Citizens Searching the Field.

In the orchard in rear of this house was the position of the rebel batteries during a portion of the attack upon our left. Fifteen of their horses lie dead on the ground, swollen to an enormous size. As yet the citizens have made no attempt to bury the putrefying masses. All over the field are numerous men from the country, engaged in gathering whatever is of value. A few are merely in search of relics, but the most of them are bearing away any and everything that they consider of pecuniary value. Here in this orchard I find a countryman engaged in cutting the harness from one of the dead battery horses, and preparing to carry it from the field. Another has collected a dozen blankets dropped by the soldiers in the heat of the engagement. Another walks past me with three of the best muskets he can find on the battle field. Sentries have very properly been posted where they can take from visitors all that is of value to the government.

The Rebel Dead.

Retracing my steps before reaching the extreme left I return to the center of our position on the Cemetery Hill. I do not follow the path by which I came, but take a route along the hollow, between the two ridges. It was across this hollow that the charges were made in the assaults upon our position. Much blood was poured out between these two swells of land. Most of the dead have been buried where they fell or gathered in little clusters beneath some spreading tree or beside clumps of bushes. Some of the rebel dead are still uncovered. The first that meets my gaze I come upon suddenly, as I descend a bank some three or four feet in height, to the side of a small spring. He is lying near the spring, as if he had crawled there to obtain a draught of water. His hands were outspread upon the earth, and clutching at the little tufts of grass beneath him. His haversack and canteen are still hanging to his side, and his hat is lying near him. His musket is gone—either carried off by his comrades, taken by some relic seeker, or placed in the accumulated heap by our own soldiers.

Another corps a few paces distant lies with its hands thrown upward, in the position taken when the soldier probably killed instantly while standing upright, and fell backwards as he expired. His clothing is not torn, no blood appears upon his garments, and his face, though swollen, has no expression of anguish. Twenty yards from him are the remains of a body cut in two by a shot or shell. The grass around him is drenched in his blood, that even the rain of yesterday has not washed away. His gun is shattered in pieces, evidently by the same missile that killed its owner, and is lying ten feet away. As I move forward I find another corpse, evidently that of a rebel, who was struck while in the act of taking aim over his musket. His hands are raised, the left extended beyond the right and the fingers of the former partly bent, as if they had just been grasping the stock of a gun. One foot is advanced before the other, and the body is lying on its right side. To appearances it did not move a muscle after receiving its wound.

Additional Horrors.

The body of another rebel attracts my attention by a singular circumstance. The face is discolored in the extreme, black as that of the purest Congo negro. The hands are as delicate as those of a lady and of snowy whiteness. With the exception of the face, the body is but little swollen, and there are no signs of the commencement of decomposition. Several bodies that I find show blackened faces but no others than this display such a contrast between the color of the face and hands. Near a small white house on the rebel line lies the body of an officer, evidently a lieutenant or captain. His right arm is extended as if to grasp the hand of a friend. All possible positions in which a dying man can be noticed on this field.

On the Emmitsburg Road.

Reaching the Emmitsburg road I find the same signs of battle that I have mentioned elsewhere. The rails are everywhere scarred by bullets, the fences thrown down, the ground cut by the wheels of the guns and trodden smooth by the feet of the soldiers. In every place it is strewn with the wreck of battle. A shattered gun carriage stood and received the shot of our own. I met near here a woman and three children on their return to their home on the left of the line of battle. Five days ago they were forced to flee to town to escape from their locality between the two contending lines. This morning, for the first time, they return back. I fear the battle has made sad havoc with their property. If their house is standing, they will find it shattered by shot and shell and all its furniture torn up and destroyed. The war tells heavily upon the inhabitants of the region where it is waged. Its brief transfer to this locality will long show its effects upon Gettysburg and its vicinity.

Shelling Gen. Meade's Headquarters.

The little farm house on the Emmitsburg road, where General Meade held his headquarters during the campaign, is most fearfully cut up. It is already known how General Lee masked his artillery and opened with one hundred and thirty pieces at the same moment. Two shells in every second of time fell around these headquarters. The shells tore through the little white building, exploding and scattering their fragments in every direction. Not a spot anywhere was safe. One shell through the doorstep, another in the chimney, a third shattering a rafter, a fourth cutting off the legs of a chair in which a staff officer was seated; others severed and splintered the posts in front of the house, howled through the trees by which the dwelling was surrounded, and raised deep furrows of the soft earth. At the fence in front of the building the horses of aids and orderlies were standing. A dozen of the frightened animals fell by the rebel projectiles, and others broke away and fled in the wildest fright towards the rear. One staff officer, and another and another were wounded. Strange to say, amid all this iron hail no one of the staff was killed. Every man stared death full in the face, and had little prospect of escaping unhurt. Rarely in the history of war has there been a scene to equal this.

The Cannons Elsewhere.

This storm of pitiless iron was by no means hurled at headquarters alone. It was Lee's grand attempt to snatter and break our center, preparatory to the charge which should possess him the key to our position. It was a brilliant plan, and one in which Napoleon often achieved success. Wherever that array of guns was pointed there the air was laden with the hurtling missiles of death. Every tree, every shrub, every blade of grass bent before the blast. Through the thick, rolling smoke cloud that separated the contending hosts shell after shell crashed on its fiery way. Man nor beast could stand before it. Huge gaps were cut in our lines, and battery after battery hushed its fire, disabled by the rebel guns. Nearly two hours of this cannonade, and then came the charge which was so nobly repulsed.

Scene of the Tigers Charge.

Once more at the cemetery. I struck across the Baltimore turnpike to the hill that forms the extremity of the ridge on which the main portion of our line of battle was located. This hill overlooks the town and the whole valley towards the northwest, where it runs off into the hilly country in the direction of the Susquehanna. It was on this hill, just to the right of the cemetery, where the battery was posted that the Tiger Brigade of Louisiana attempted to take by a charge. I have elsewhere spoken of this charge and the manner in which it was met by our troops. Looking from this elevation down to the valley below one can readily understand the desperate nature of such a charge. That the Tigers succeeded in reaching the guns and actually spiking one of them argues great valor on their part. Equal heroism was displayed by our troops in driving back the enemy after they had once obtained the hill.

Position on the Centre.

This hill was made artificially strong during the night, after the first assault, by the erection of several redans, behind each of which a gun was posted. These were sufficiently high to prevent their being carried with ease by the enemy. In addition to the artillery in this position there was a considerable number of guns held in reserve. This position of the line received special attention, as it was the key to our whole position. Should this be carried our defeat would be certain, as it would separate our wings from each other. The defenses that were thrown up still remain, but the guns were in the road in pursuit of the retreating rebels. The hill commands a full view of the town and of the whole region of the fight. Far on the left the mountainous stretch away to the Potomac, and on the right the Susquehanna. The green fields

Terrible Suffering

Eczema All Over Baby's Body.
"When my baby was four months old his face broke out with eczema, and at sixteen months of age, his face, hands and arms were in a dreadful state. The eczema spread all over his body. We had to put a mask or cloth over his face and tie up his hands. Finally we gave him Hood's Sarsaparilla and in a few months he was entirely cured. Today he is a healthy boy." SCOTT'S EMULSION is the only emulsion imitated. The reason is plain—it's the best. Insist upon having Scott's—it's the world's standard flesh and strength builder.

ALL DRUGGISTS

and darker forests look as peaceful as if they had never heard the sound of contending armies. Nearly two hundred thousand men met here three days ago in mortal combat, and to day there is a Sabbathlike stillness.

On the Right Centre.

To the right of the hill the line of battle for almost half mile falls back at right angles to the general course, from Round Hill to the Cemetery. This is due to the configuration of the ground—the valley through which a stream winds, bending sharply to the eastward. From here the line does not follow a regular ridge, but is over a succession of elevations and depressions. The defenses are on these inequalities along the front of the crest. Fortune willed it that for a portion of distance there should be a strong stone fence. This was rendered more dense by throwing up a quantity of dirt on both sides, preventing the bullets from glancing or passing into the interstices of the wall. The trees around this wall are thickly scarred by bullets from rebel rifles, and the same is the case with those in front, behind which the rebel sharpshooters were posted.

Within twenty yards of one portion of the works are the remains of a rebel's coat and a bloody blanket. Near it I found a copy of the New Testament, of the ordinary 12mo. size, well printed and not badly bound. On the title page is the imprint of the Confederate States Bible Society, and it claims to have been thrown from the press of an establishment in Atlanta, Ga. It contains the name of John H. Congreve, of an Alabama regiment, the number being so blurred that it cannot be made out with certainty. On the fly leaf in the end of the book the owner attempted to draw a representation of the rebel flag above that of the Union.

In the Forest Graves of the Slain.

After passing the forest hill on the right, a rocky and somewhat steep ascent, I entered the forest. The breastworks here are constructed of piled logs and dirt. The engineers were in all cases careful to keep them on the brow of the hill, the most difficult positions for the rebels to assault. Camp debris again becomes visible. In one place is a considerable quantity of cast off soldiers' clothing, shelter tents and rubber blankets. A little back of the position on the hillside is a quiet nook, where the earth is less rocky, are the graves of several of the Union slain. The loss does not appear to have been heavy on our own side in this locality, owing to the excellent position that we occupied.

Down the slope of the first hill, nearly to the bank of the stream, is a long mound of yellow earth. Approaching this I find it to be the resting place of a portion of the rebel dead. Close by the side of a tree has been scraped and neatly smoothed down. On this spot has been placed the following inscription:

Forty-five Rebels buried to the right.

An index points to the mound. Further down the valley is another mound close by the bank of the stream.

A Rocky Ascent.

On the second elevation from the cemetery the line bends still more to the right, following the brow of the hill. At the base of the hill is a stream known as Rock Creek, across which the rebels were obliged to move in their advance on the right. It is but a few steps across, and not large enough to hinder the movements of the troops. From the stream to the summit of the hill the ascent is quite steep—too steep to be climbed, except at a slow walk. The rocks along the whole ascent are rough and irregular, and in the face of a heavy fire, must be difficult to pass. The trees are of good size and the forest is free from underbrush. The limbs of the trees are from ten to twenty feet high, and affords no screen to the approaching foe.

Scene of Attack on the Right.

About half way from the center of the extreme right is the location of the scene of the fiercest attack upon that portion of the field. The most terrible fire of the day has left its marks upon the trees and rocks. I have seen the whole of the Shiloh battlefield, as well as that where Sherman met his disastrous repulse at the Chickasaw Bayou. The traces of fighting there are but slight compared to those on this ground. I find tree after tree scarred from base to limbs so thickly that it would have been impossible to place one's hand upon their trunks without covering the marks of a bullet. One tree was stripped of more than half its leaves by the effect of the bullets alone, and many of the twigs were cut half off, and were hanging wilted and ready to drop to the ground. The trunk of the tree, about ten inches in diameter, was cut and scarred in every part. The fire which had struck these trees was that which was directed from our muskets upon the advancing rebels. Every tree and bush for the distance of half a mile along these works was nearly as badly marked. The storm of bullets must have been as thick as hailstones in an ordinary storm. How a man could exist in it and come out unhurt is difficult to imagine.

The trees are not alone in displaying the terrible effects of the shot. The rocks, wherever they face towards our breastworks, are thickly stippled with dots of white. On one rock, presenting a surface of about seven square feet, bullets have left their traces in little blurred spots, like a snow flake of the largest size. The missiles, flattened by contact with the rock, are lying scattered about in the leaves, Corner-stone Laying.

St. James Lutheran Church will lay the corner stone of their new church on next Sunday. The exercises have been arranged for the morning immediately following the Sunday School session, but in the event of an intense heat as on last Sunday the hour may be changed to the evening and will be given public announcement if changed.

The Sunday School will march in a body from Brua Chapel and will take a prominent part in the singing. Dr. Joel Swartz will not be able to be present being in Florida at the present time, but it is expected to have some word from him on the occasion. Dr. Jacob A. Clutz, pastor of St. James preceding the present pastor, Rev. J. B. Baker, will make an address. It is expected that Dr. A. R. Steck and Dr. Enders of York, former pastors, will also be present and make addresses.

Rapid progress has been made by Contractor Wm. H. Johns at the erection of the church. The removal of the ground in excavating for the cellars of the new building was completed on Monday and occupied by a large lot of men and teams for weeks. Great quantities of stone were next hauled and placed in the foundation walls and upon this foundation a course of granite has been placed so that the walls are completed to the level of the floor of the building. This floor will be covered with polished granite for corner stone laying and the platform will be of granite set in place of those placed in the corner stone laying in 1848. When this is done the expected to be finished.

In the new corner stone will be placed a Bible hymn book, catechism, list of all the present members of the church copies of the St. James Messenger and all the town papers, a copy of the church publications and other articles. The contents will be placed in a copper box to be placed in the corner stone. The 1888 constitution with all its contents will also be placed in the new structure.

This is the first time that Hershey Park has been selected as the place for the annual outing. It is situated between Harrisburg and Lebanon and is one of the most attractive resort places in this section of Pennsylvania. The committee in charge has arranged for a low rate which will be announced later.

Can You Get Hot Water When You Want It?

CAN you get hot water at the turn of the faucet when there are no fires in the house—without waiting, or without lighting any heating device?

Can you always get hot water, even though there has been an unusual call upon the supply by other members of the family?

Can you get all the hot water you want the first thing in the morning or late at night? If not, you are missing one of the modern conveniences easily available in every home.

This miracle worker, which will give you an unlimited supply of hot water at any time of day or night, is called the RUUD AUTOMATIC GAS WATER HEATER. It requires no attention. You do not have to light it or put it out—all you do is turn the faucet and hot water flows. The best idea of a RUUD may be had from an actual demonstration. Call at our salesrooms and see the RUUD in actual operation.

The RUUD AUTOMATIC GAS WATER HEATER is brought into the cellar and connected with the water and gas pipes. A tiny pilot light is lighted and that is the end as far as you are concerned.

When the hot water faucet is open, the pressure of water operates a valve which turns on the gas in the burner—turning off the faucet automatically puts out the gas.

For reasons of economy and to prevent the water from getting too hot a temperature regulator automatically turns down the gas every time the water reaches a certain temperature, and automatically turns it on as the water starts to cool. This is the most wonderful part of the RUUD—it allows only enough gas to be burned to keep the water hot, and only the water that is actually used is heated.

Hossfross died while being hurried on a train to Hagerstown. After State's Attorney Armstrong had made an investigation he pronounced an inquest unnecessary. House Burned.

The house of Geo. C. Oyler on the farm he purchased from Jonas Starner in Franklin township, burned to the ground on a recent Sunday afternoon together with a large part of the contents. Samuel Glatfelter is tenant on the farm. The fire is supposed to have been caused by a defective flue and gained such headway when discovered that all efforts were at once put forth to save the furniture. Little of the goods on the second story was saved but a good part of the first floor furniture was gotten to a place of safety. The building was a frame one and the entire one end was in flames before the family and some visitors who were in the building knew that anything was wrong. The building was partly covered by insurance but Mr. Glatfelter's loss on the contents is total.

Adams County Graduates.

Among the graduates at West Chester State Normal School were the following from Adams county: Miss M. Frances Hollinger, daughter of the late Dr. Clayton and Mrs. Martha Hollinger of Abbottstown; Miss Nora E. Kauffman, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John L. Kauffman of East Berlin; Miss Anna M. Michner, daughter of Mrs. Florence G. Michner of Bendersville. The latter won second prize, five dollars, offered by The Philadelphia Friends Society for an essay on the Peace Movement.

A GUEST.

Reunion of 87th Pa. Regt. Planned

The survivors of the Eighty-seventh regiment, Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, will hold their annual reunion on September 19 at the bungalow of Capt. W. H. Lanus, near Emigsville. This reunion will mark the semi-centennial year of the organization of the regiment and a special effort will be made to have every survivor present.

The last reunion was held at Captain Lanus' bungalow on September 24, 1909. At that time an executive committee, consisting of Capt. John Fahs, Lieut. Alexander Strickler, Capt. W. H. Lanus, Alexander Kluedinst and Michael Smysier, was appointed to arrange for the next reunion. This committee held a meeting last week and appointed a general committee of arrangements as follows:

Capt. John Fahs, company A; Corporal Charles Z. Denues, company A; James Oren, company B; Lieut. Charles H. Stallman, company C; Alexander Kluedinst, company B; Lieut. Alexander Strickler, company E; Sergeant Fred Breidling, company E; Corporal William T. Ziegler, company F; John C. Hoffman, company G; Daniel Smith, company H; Capt. W. H. Lanus, company I; Thomas Paley, company K; Michael Smysier, regimental commissary sergeant.

This general committee also held a meeting in the office of Capt. W. H. Lanus. Captain Fahs was elected chairman, J. C. Hoffman secretary, and Lieut. Charles H. Stallman, treasurer.

As the ten companies of the regiment were mustered into service as rapidly as their respective enrollments were completed, the dates varying from August 24 to September 25, 1861, it was somewhat difficult for the committee to fix a date for the reunion and jubilee celebration. September 19, the forty-seventh anniversary of the battle of Opequon, Va., near Winchester, in which the Eighty-seventh took an active part, although the three-year term of most of the men had expired, was picked as the most satisfactory date for the reunion. Capt. W. H. Lanus, Charles Z. Denues and John C. Hoffman were appointed a sub-committee to complete the arrangements for the reunion.

Every survivor of the regiment, whose whereabouts can be learned, will be notified of the reunion. The committee will receive the addresses of those who were not at the last reunion at the office of Capt. W. H. Lanus, and all resident members are urged to communicate what information they have of this kind of members out of the city.

Co. F of the 87th was largely recruited in Adams County among the survivors are Capt. Wm. T. Ziegler, Capt. Calvin Gilbert, John H. Sheads, Perry J. Tawney of this place and Daniel F. Reigle of near town. Other surviving veterans living in county were in other companies, S. R. Andrews of this place in Co. A. John Crone of Orrtanna in Co. E and Wm. G. Small of New Oxford in Co. G.

Meade Statue for Washington.

Veteran soldiers in the State are greatly interested in the proposition that the State erect a statue in Washington, D. C., to the memory of the late General George Gordon Meade, of Philadelphia, who commanded the Union forces at the battle of Gettysburg, where the rebellion reached its high-water mark and got the first deadly blow that resulted eventually in its suppression.

During the last legislative session a bill to appropriate $20,000 for the monument, the authorities of the city of Washington to furnish a site for the monument. This bill was passed with no opposition whatever, and was last week approved by Governor Tener.

The preamble of the bill recites that it is fitting and proper that a statue to Meade should be erected in Washington and that such a memorial should be erected at the expense of the State upon whose soil was fought the battle of Gettysburg, in which Meade gained a deathless renown.

The bill provides for the creation of a commission of Governor Tener, Attorney General Bell, the commander of the Pennsylvania Grand Army of the Republic, one member of the Senate and one member of the House and the general chairman of the Committee on Meade Statue of the Philadelphia Brigade Association, who shall be appointed by the Governor.

The commission will serve without compensation other than its traveling expenses, and shall organize within fifteen days after its appointment. The $20,000 appropriation will cover all of the expenses of making, erecting and dedicating the statue and the expenses of the commission.

The commission, however, shall not begin its work nor shall any money be available until a suitable site for the statue has been provided for in Washington by the municipal authorities. The question of a site, however, will not be a serious one, as Washington authorities are most anxious to adorn their city with fine statues, and will very readily proffer a suitable location in one of the prominent squares or circles. Some of the veterans who have evinced much interest over the matter are talking of having George Gray Barnard, the Capitol groups sculptor, make the statue of Meade.

Bowers' Drowning Makes Disclosure

Mervin Bowers' drowning as told in our last issue, in St. James' Lake, on the Natural Bridge road, St. Louis, on June 11, has disclosed a chapter in that young man's life undreamed of by his friends in that city as appears by dispatch received from that city. It apparently shows that he abandoned a wife and four children in New Oxford, Pa., on October 4, 1904.

Miss Anna Herbst, who says Bowers was engaged to marry her, paid his funeral expenses and had his body buried in her family lot.

The first intimation of Bowers' past came when Chief of Police Young received a letter from Mrs. Ella Bowers, of New Oxford, which declared that her husband, Mervin, left her seven years ago, and that she had not heard from him since. The letter told of the four children, whose support the husband had thrown upon her, and asked the department to investigate to see if it was he who had been drowned in St. James' Lake.

From the description she gave and other facts, the detectives assigned to the case decided that the man was really the woman's husband, and wrote her to that effect.

William Bott, the saloonkeeper for whom Bowers was bartender, appeared at the central station with a letter which he had received from Ella Bowers, in New Oxford. The letter repeated the story told to Chief Young, with the additional statement that $2000 life insurance was carried by her husband when he left her. Mrs. Bowers asked Bott to try to discover whether this insurance was still carried, and whether it was in her favor.
